DELAPRE

Lying on the southern boundary of Northampton, Delapre, with its 550 acres of parkland and gardens, has a long and eventful history.

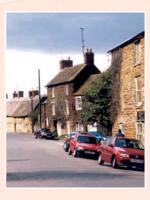

From its beginnings as a Cluniac nunnery, Delapre was destined to become the temporary resting place of an English Queen, a War of the Roses battlefield, an 18th century country house and park, a 20th century home for Northamptonshire records ... until finally it became an attractive public park and home to Delapre Golf Complex.

HARDINGSTONE

Lying on the outskirts of Northampton, Hardingstone's ironstone and brick buildings are typical of many Northamptonshire villages. Many of the brick terraced houses in the High Street were built by the Bouverie family (owners of Delapre Abbey from 1764 to 1946).

Also in the High Street is the parish church of St. Edmund 10. Its oldest part is probably the early 13th century tower although the church is mentioned in documents dating from 1107 AD. It was restored in the 1860s and the chancel contains several 19th century Bouverie family plaques.

Delapre Abbey

Delapre Abbey

The Abbey of St. Mary-de-le-Pre (St. Mary in the meadow) was founded by Simon de Senlis, Earl of Northampton in 1145 AD. It was a small establishment and there are few records of the Abbey's everyday life.

On two occasions however, the Abbey played a small role in national events - first when Queen Eleanor of Castile's body rested there on its journey to London in 1290 and then nearly 200 years later when the battle of Northampton was fought '...in... the meadows beside the nunnery'.

Soon after Henry VIII closed the monasteries and abbeys in England in 1539, Delapre and its lands were bought by the Tate family. Over the next two centuries they transformed the former nunnery into a comfortable country house and estate.

In 1764 the estate was bought by the Bouverie family, in whose hands it remained until 1946 when Delapre was sold to the Northampton Corporation (now Northampton Borough Council). The Abbey housed Northamptonshire Record Office until its move to Wooton Hall in 1991 since then the Abbey buildings have stood empty.

Although clues to its religious beginnings may still be concealed in the Abbey's walls, the buildings visible today date mostly to the 17th and 18th centuries - the result of extensive alterations carried out by the Tate and Bouverie families.

Delapre Gardens

Delapre Gardens

To the east of the Abbey buildings, a formal Elizabethan garden was constructed by the Tate family. This was remodelled in the 18th century, along with the rest of the estate and its parkland, in the style of Capability Brown. The last Bouverie to live at Delapre was also an enthusiastic gardener and today the enclosed gardens include a game larder, Victorian glasshouses, topiary, a rose garden, herbaceous borders, and statues. The gardens are open to the public when the gardeners are on site (Monday to Friday). This may be subject to change in the future.

Oueen Eleanor's Cross

On the 28th November 1290, Queen Eleanor of Castile, wife of Edward I, died at Harby in Lincolnshire. Following her death, her body was conveyed in a solemn procession to Westminster in London. One of the stops along the way was Delapre, where the Queen's body remained at the Abbey while the King lodged at nearby Northampton Castle.

The procession then continued south to London, halting at the top of the hill so that a place could be set aside for the location of a magnificent stone monument - one of twelve crosses commissioned by Edward to commemorate Queen Eleanor and her final journey.

Battle of Northampton

On the 10th July 1460 a Yorkist army led by the Earl of Warwick approached the southern side of Northampton. Waiting for them was the Lancastrian King Henry VI and his army encampment. Watched by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London from the safety of the 'headless cross' (Queen Eleanor's Cross), the battle took place during the afternoon and was swift. Thanks to the treachery of Lord Grey, King Henry was captured. Many Lancastrian soldiers were killed or drowned in the River Nene trying to flee and their bodies were buried in the Abbey church or churchyard (the site of which was discovered in the late 19th century).

Charter Wood 3 / Delapre Wood 7

A plantation of 800 oak trees was created to the east of the Abbey and its gardens in 1989, as part of the commemorations of the 800th anniversary of the Borough Charter granted to Northampton by Richard 1 in 1189.

Lying to the south is Delapre Woods, planted at the same time as the Abbey gardens. Oak, beech, sweet chestnut and conifers create a mixed woodland with good walks and fine views of the town and Abbey.

Delapre Lake

Created from old gravel workings, the Lake is used for water skiing and fishing. It has an important wildlife role as one of the network of lakes in Nene Valley, providing a refuge for over-wintering wildfowl such as Canada Geese and the Great Crested Grebe.
